What is FBA Inventory Reimbursement?

When you sell products through Amazon FBA (Fulfillment by Amazon), Amazon takes responsibility for storing, packing, and shipping your inventory. However, with such a massive operation, mistakes are common — inventory may be lost, damaged, or not returned by customers. This is where FBA Inventory Reimbursement becomes important.

FBA Inventory Reimbursement refers to the process of claiming compensation from Amazon for any mishandled, lost, or damaged inventory in their fulfillment centers.

Why is FBA Inventory Reimbursement Important?

Every unit you send to Amazon represents your investment. If your product is lost or damaged by Amazon, you deserve to be compensated. Unfortunately, not all reimbursements happen automatically — and many sellers don't even realize they're losing money.

Using a proper FBA Inventory Reimbursement strategy or service helps you:

- Track and identify errors in your FBA reports
- File claims with proper documentation
- Recover money you didn't know Amazon owed you
- Increase your net profit by reducing hidden losses

Common Scenarios That Qualify for Reimbursement

Amazon may owe you money if:

- Inventory is lost in the fulfillment center
- Items are damaged by Amazon's warehouse staff
- Customer returns the wrong or damaged product
- Orders are refunded but not returned
- Overcharging of FBA fees like weight or dimension miscalculation

In all these cases, you can file for FBA Inventory Reimbursement.

How to Get FBA Inventory Reimbursement

There are two main ways:

1. Do it Yourself: Manually check your reports in Seller Central, identify issues, and open cases with Amazon support.

2. Use a Reimbursement Service: These services audit your account and file claims for you. They usually charge a percentage of the recovered amount.

Either way, staying proactive about FBA Inventory Reimbursement is crucial for keeping your business profitable.

Conclusion

If you're selling through Amazon FBA, don't leave money on the table. Start tracking your lost and damaged inventory and claim your FBA Inventory Reimbursement regularly. It's one of the easiest ways to boost your bottom line without spending extra on ads or stock.
